

Kitten

Written by Lloyd J. Fleck

Hello Kitten, I've come to see you my love.
I know you're with the angels and stars above.
Nineteen years since that fateful winter's night.
Since that horrible accident took the light of my life.
A match made in heaven now gone forever.
Why does such true love, have to be severed?

I wish I could be with you now.
Oh, how I long to hold you somehow.
Kitten my love; one day I will embrace you once again.
But only when my time on this earth ends.

I remember the day you were laid to rest.
It was an awful wound, like a dull knife stabbed deep in my chest.
Later that day the reverend bear.
Spoke words of kindness and comfort in the air.
The good reverend said that love heals all wounds.
But he did not tell me that the pain of these scars only time could undo.

Kitten my love, thank you for the rose.
Thank you for the years together we spent.
With another woman I could never be content.

Others say you were one in a million.
I know better, you were one of a kind.
This is true because, now and forever you're on my mind.

Kitten, I must now leave.
Sabrina, every one of us loves you...
Eternally.