

Lessons

The lessons that a father gives his child are often lost
In times of struggle, fits of rage, to know that it might cost
That friendship held between them, as they go their separate ways
As feelings torn within their souls reach out for gentle praise
For indecision, lack of time will drive them both to know
An instant that should hold them close might lapse as if to grow
Into a time of disrespect, so both may never learn
That in relation to this loss of time, true pain will churn
Forever in the hearts of both until they find between
That time together once again, this bond again be seen
The lessons will forever be a segment of their lives
Both child and father teaching as together time goes by
That moment shared connecting life, the lesson now is learned
The truth of life reopened now, it never will be spurned
Their point so precious never lost, the father, child will hold
The truth of love between them now, forever strong and bold
